cultural exchange program. Inspired by Maestro Brooks-Bruzzese's Latin-American roots, the annual series pairs a handful of the Symphony's own musicians with internationally renowned chamber orchestras.

This year, the 14th annual Summerfest features the I Musici Estensi Orchestra from Milan. Maestro Brooks-Bruzzese and his colleagues traveled to Italy in May and June for rehearsals, performances and recording sessions with I Musici. Then, in July and August, the Italian orchestra comes to the U.S. to perform with their Symphony counterparts in Broward County as well as throughout Florida and in Argentina and Panama.

"Summerfest brings top performers to audiences that might otherwise never have the opportunity to hear such world-class quality," LaBonte notes. "We offer ticketed concerts for the public and free educational concerts. We go into conservatories and schools to do master classes. That's part of our mission."

Last year, in partnership with Rotary International and the International Sister Cities Program, Summerfest musicians performed in Haiti and participated in humanitarian work – including potable water, reforestation and computer access projects – with support from funds raised in South Florida. "Our goal is not only to give wonderful performances but to make sure there's a measurable outgrowth in the communities," LaBonte says. "We planted fruit trees. Many of the musicians left money for rice and beans for the people in the village. The mayor in one city was in tears. He said they had never had anything like this before." A benefit concert for this year's program in Haiti is scheduled for July 22 at the Broward Center.

A Cultural Institution

With its 20th anniversary season just a year away, this globetrotting orchestra clearly is doing things right. "I see steady growth," says cellist Byrns. "A lot of musicians and organizations want fast growth, but if you spread yourself too thin you're unable to adequately supply the quality the public needs. We're trying to grow in small baby steps."

LaBonte notes that Bogdan Chruszcz, who was concertmaster of the Florida Philharmonic, is now the Symphony's concertmaster. "Four or five musicians from the Philharmonic who moved away like working with us so much that they fly in or drive in for rehearsals and performances," she adds.

"The Symphony of the Americas is one of our community's most important cultural institutions – not only for the high caliber of its performances, but also because of its unwavering commitment to education," says Mark Nerenhausen, president and CEO of the Broward Center. "We look forward to many more great things ahead." ★
